

1C Tam Naomi

Blog Entry: The Best Places to Snap Wonderful Nature Views of Hong Kong

Hong Kong is a modern yet busy city filled with skyscrapers. People usually think there aren't any natural things to see, but they are wrong! It is also rich in natural places.

Here are some of the best places to take nature photos in this fantastic city:

First, I recommend you to visit Hong Kong Wetland Park. There are different kinds of wetland animals and plants, so you can see a diverse amount of wetland creatures. There are ducks, geese, and even shuttle hopfish—an animal which only appears in the wetlands. For plants, you can find lantanas and water lilies. One of the best ways to capture the amazing creatures is by using a close-up shot as you can clearly capture the details of the animals.

Second, if you want to use a wide shot to capture the beautiful sunset, you must go to Tai Mo Shan. It is the highest mountain in Hong Kong. Although hiking is a very difficult thing, you can see the charming, warm sunset from the top. Using a wide shot can help you capture the colourful and warm sunset. But it may be a bit difficult to get there since you need to go there by MTR and get on a bus!

Third, Tung Ping Chau is also a great choice for you to capture Hong Kong's natural beauty. It is famous for its zigzag layers of white siliceous rock which stands out through the tilted and flat rock. The sea there is also very clean, so you can see the hefty white chunks of washed-up coral and some marine animals in the lovely blue sea. Standing near the mirror-like water surface, you can feel the sea breeze. I recommend you to use both close-up shots and wide shots. Close-up shots are for you to capture the little sea creatures, and the wide shot is for capturing the spectacular hexagonal columns and water splashing onto the rocks.

Whether you're a professional photographer or just someone who loves to capture natural views, Hong Kong is a breathtaking city that offers a wide range of natural places for photography enthusiasts. Whether you want to use extreme wide shots or extreme close-up shots to capture the city's spirit, there is something for everyone. Come and grab your camera and start exploring this impressive city.

Posted by Naomi-Tam31 at 1:09 am.